

Course Description

Course Redesign for Significant Learning and Transformation

This course has been developed by the Transforming Employability for Social Change in East Africa (TESCEA) partnership.

The purpose of the 'Course redesign for significant learning and transformation' course is to enable academic teaching staff to conceptualise their course content to embed the soft skills and gender responsiveness that their students will need when entering the world of 21st century employment. The course is aimed at academic teaching staff who teach mainly at the undergraduate level.

The ten-week online course can be taken as a standalone training, or subsequent to the other trainings that make up the Transforming Higher Education for Social Change redesign learning journey.

Academic teaching staff will start by conceptualizing the content of their course; then crafting learning outcomes based on these concepts, inculcating the hard and soft skills required in their discipline, producing a course assessment plan and a schedule of teaching and learning strategies aligned to their course learning outcomes.

Hosted on Moodle, an online learning platform, the course is running in a mostly asynchronous mode – allowing the participants maximum flexibility as to when to learn – complemented by synchronous drop-in clinics where the participants have a chance to interact with facilitators and peers in real time. The content of the course is delivered in a mixed-media format – text-based resources, videos and interactive exercises. There is also group work in a dedicated discussion forum to provide mutual support and feedback on a course assignment.

Following successful completion of all eight units, academic teaching staff will have developed an outline of a redesigned course that will equip their students with 21 century skills alongside subject knowledge. The natural continuation of this course is the 'Learning Design – planning effective learning experiences' course in which the participants will start planning each of the learning sessions step by step to ensure a high-quality learner experience.
